Plants Eat Pests

Carnivorous plants produce beautiful leaves and flowers and they gain interest from children who may then become interested in growing plants. The hardier varieties that I grow are easier to grow than most other plants in many ways because they are lower maintenance and you do not need to worry about when to water them. This is because they do not need fertilizer and you do not need to apply water as often as most other pot plants because you sit them in a tray containing water. It is easy to see when to replace the water.

I am growing a range of these plants and can either sell them wholesale or retail either to the local area or elsewhere by mail order. They include sundews (Drosera), Venus Fly Traps and pitcher plants (Nepenthes and Sarracenia). I plan to use any profits to fund projects to benefit communities. It would be appreciated if you could ask some people if they are interested or share an email or print out that I could send you. I am seeking people to help sell them. No long term contracts are required and they can be casually sold in places like markets, store fronts or online.

I sell both bare rooted and potted plants. Some have an advantage over others that you buy elsewhere because in the base of the smaller pots I have inserted a self watering wick system that means easy care which saves you time. It provides the correct level of water to enable optimum growth. It reduces the risk of the plants drying out. The plants can stand on top of an empty planter pot or rack in a tray of water with the wicks hanging down into the water. Alternatively, I can provide a special stand and tray. If the water level drops below the level of the bottom of the pot, the capillary wicks draw up water to keep the soil moist. Durable material is used.

Plants are labeled with a small tag with a code to determine the hybrid or species name. I also provide pots, trays, wicks, capillary matting and potting mix.

I also have many other websites relating to separate topics including, free groups, new ideas and rare information to help people. They are briefly summarised at WWW.TrueSolutions.info and on another paper. They include: 1. A group to record the weather and share data. I can loan people weather instruments. 2. An astronomy group with local viewing nights. 3. A group to help inventors and startup businesses. The aim is to form and find databases of honest companies and organisations to help them. 4. Many practical inventions that save time and money and have huge advantages over competing systems. 5. New ideas to restore democracy and prosperity to the country. 6 A group to search for suppressed technology that is better than what is widely available 7. A group to search for people whose prayers make a noticeable and measurable difference and find people that can produce the evidence that they are led by God. If we can find them, they could help and pray for us and lead us to the truth. This could form a revival. Please let me know of anyone that can help with these plans such as by sharing information. Free leaflets are available.
